The video Last Lecture with Randy Pausch was very inspiring to me. As a young kid I had new dreams of what I wanted to be each week, some might call it indecision I call it ambitious. But when I really took a step back I realized what was at the root of every fantasy of mine and it was movies. I wanted to be an F.B.I. agent because of Miss Congeniality, a boxer because of Rocky. It wasn't that I wanted to feel and be all of these things but I wanted to make others believe and feel a wide variety of emotions and desires. The main part that stuck out to me while watching this video was when Randy Pausch was talking about one of his former students who wanted to work on the Starwars movies. This mattered to me because currently with the pandemic there is talk of the days of going to the movie theaters being over, that instant streaming will take over. While streaming movies still gets the movies out there it takes away the experience, which is what I want to give out to others. I think that this video was inspiring that although obstacles and people who don't believe in you may exist, it is your passion and drive that will get you there.
